Butter up

Not ready to commit to a full-blown island? Studio Hám's Butter prep table delivers all the function without the tie of a permanent piece. Inspired by the elegance of Georgian dairy tables, this beauty brings serious style – and a touch of portability – to the kitchen. Crafted from solid oak, it's topped with honed marble framed in aged brass. Available in two finishes, Hám's own dark stain, Cowboy, or pale Limed Oak, this will become the hardest-working, and best-looking, piece in your kitchen. Butter prep table in Limed Oak, from £12,950, Studio Hám

FLOWER POWER

If you missed the reveal at Milan Design Week, allow us to introduce Fantini's Flora brassware collection by Vincent Van Duysen. Newly expanded to include shower fittings, the range has a trio of handle options. Our fave is this modern reinterpretation of the crosshead – impeccably balanced, delightfully tactile and oh-so-grippy. Flora three-hole basin mixer, price on request, C.P. Hart

GO FISH!

Keep this collab on your radar: East London's creative design duo, Russian For Fish, has joined forces with craftsman Jack Alexander to debut a bespoke kitchen collection. After years of working together on various projects around their Limehouse home turf, the two companies have formalised their partnership to share a singular vision with a wider audience. Under the RFF x JAD banner, architecture-driven design meets precision digital fabrication and time-honoured craftsmanship. The promise is kitchens that are bespoke but don't break the bank. RFF x JAD bespoke kitchens start from £21,600
